

Evaluating Your Support Coordination Services

Support Coordinators work with you to plan for and find services that help meet your needs and reach your goals. It is important to ask yourself if your Support Coordinator is assisting you to get the support you need. You should take time to let them know what they are doing well and where you think things could be better.

When your Support Coordinator is not providing the help you need, you have the right to seek services that are a better fit.

You can use this tool to help figure out if your Support Coordinator is meeting your needs. You may want to include your family, friends, and others that know you well to help you think about your answers.

What is your Support Coordinator doing well?

Your Support Coordinator is doing a good job meeting your needs in the areas you chose "yes." Discuss with your Support Coordinator what they are doing well.

What are some things you'd like your Support Coordinator to do differently?

Your Support Coordinator may not be doing a good job meeting your needs in the areas you chose "no." Discuss with your Support Coordinator what they can do to make your Support Coordination services better.

Your Right to Request a Change

You are encouraged to share feedback and work in partnership with your Support Coordination Agency. You should discuss concerns about the quality of service provided by your Support Coordinator with their supervisor.

If your needs are not being met, you have the right to seek Support Coordination services that are a better fit. If the assigned Support Coordination Agency is still not providing the help you need after a full month, you can request to change agencies.

Requests to change Support Coordination Agencies can be made by:

- Selecting a new Support Coordination Agency to work with
- Completing the Support Coordination Agency Change Form:
